

Figure 1.3 System structure.

the CPUs access a common shared memory. To scale up to even larger data volumes and even higher processing speeds, parallel databases are designed to run on a cluster consisting of multiple machines. Further, distributed databases allow data storage and query processing across multiple geographically separated machines.